324 AMERICAN HISTORICAL LOWESTOFT PORCELAIN
PART DINNER SERVICE, DECORATED WITH THE*U. S. SHIP "AMERICA, OF SALEM" CIRCA 1780-1800

Consisting of an oval soup tureen and cover with gilt borders and handles, a square salad bowl with incurved corners, a square shallow dish, and fifteen plates. Each piece bears a representation of the U. S. ship "America", flying the stars and stripes at the bow and stern, painted in India ink and colors heightened with gilding. The vessel on the soup tureen bears the caption "America of Salem" on a scroll below. The porcelain has the uneven or so-called lemon-peel surface, most pronounced on the salad bowl, square dish and tureen. Blue and gilt borders. Two plates slightly chipped. (Phelps)

Width of tureen, 12 $\frac{3}{4}$ inchesDiameter of plates, 9 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches

The importance and historical significance attaching to this part service of marine Lowestoft is perhaps best gauged by the following extract taken from Edgar Stanton Maclay's "A History of the United States Navy": "On the 18th of February, 1781, Captain [Paul] Jones reached Philadelphia. Congress tendered him a vote of thanks for his brilliant services, and as a token of their high esteem gave him the command of the new 74-gun ship America, then nearly completed; but the war ended before she got to sea, when Congress presented her to France in compensation for the 74-gun ship-of-the-line Magnifique, which was lost in Boston harbor."

Another "America, of Salem," a vessel of 654 tons commanded by Captain Webb, was originally the ship "Blonde" of the French navy, purchased by the Crowninshields, of Salem, in 1798 and sold back to the French Navy in 1802. A painting of this vessel by M. F. Corné, 1799, hangs in the Marine Room of the Peabody Museum of Salem.

A third ship "America, of Salem," built by Retire Becket at Salem in 1804, was cut down and altered to a vessel of smaller tonnage in 1812 and as a privateer mounted sixteen guns and carried one hundred and ten men. In the above-mentioned museum also hangs a painting of this vessel, by George Ropes, showing the "America" in chase of his Britannic Majesty's Packet "Princess Elizabeth".

The question that remains is whether this part service was intended for use or used aboard the "America" originally placed under the command of Captain Paul Jones, or the privateer "America, of Salem" which was engaged against the English naval forces in the war of 1812.
